The Club Is the Hub
A Special Invitation to Join Roger’s Table for Lunch

I once had the opportunity to meet Roger Revelle. He was seated at the time I met him, so I did not experience his renowned tallness. Another aspect of his larger than life legacy at UCSD is the tradition of Roger’s table at the Faculty Club, a table where people who are on their own for lunch can drop in and exchange conversation and ideas with people from different fields and diverse backgrounds to meet and spark creative thinking and sharing. Roger was a dynamo that knew the power of collaboration, and among those he collaborated with was Jim Arnold, founding chair of the UCSD Chemistry Department, who often had lunch with me at Roger’s Table.

Roger’s table is a unique place for collaboration, and this seems especially fitting because UCSD and the surrounding Intellectual Community are known for excellent collaborations. For example, another Roger at UCSD, Nobel Laureate Roger Tsein wrote in his autobiography (www.nobelprize.org) about the role that collaboration with colleagues at UCSD played in his brilliant and colorful discoveries.

As a social scientist studying how people learn and collaborate, I value and welcome the exchange of ideas at Roger’s table. So, when you find yourself on your own for lunch, you are welcome to join in the conversation (Roger’s Table is located close to the coffee service and dessert table at the Club).
